You'll find a few new and useful tools as well, like Meade's color science tools and filters. Lightroom Pro 2020, on the other hand, has some exciting new filters, including the Artistic Effects filter that, according to its website, "will take your raw photo files and create truly unique images that you will love forever." It will also be useful for retouching images with such filters; however, the absence of a Masking tool is jarring. Despite these shortcomings, Lightroom's "Transformation" and "Color Adjustment" panel will allow you to modify your images without switching to Photoshop. It's an interesting and useful addition, but perhaps I should have focused on what I liked more, instead of what I disliked. In any case, I hope that the new tools will be useful for further image painting with Lightroom.
